

Nonstandard Testing Accommodations Application and Instructions For the Wyoming Bar Examination

Introduction:

The Board of Law Examiners (Board) will provide reasonable nonstandard testing accommodations (NTA) at no additional cost to applicants with disabilities as defined under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA.) The extent of accommodations will be consistent with the nature and purpose of the examination and necessitated by the applicant's disabilities. If you have any questions after you read these instructions, please contact the Bar Admissions Director at (307) 632-9061.

The burden of proof is on the applicant to establish the existence of a disability as defined by the ADA and to establish the need for NTA. A disability is defined under the ADA as a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities of an individual. "Substantially" means "considerable" or "specified to a large degree." The ADA requires the Board to provide NTA to those individuals who have a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits them from performing one or more major life activities as compared to most people in the general population. Although you may provide the required documentation establishing that you have a physical or mental impairment, you are not automatically entitled to NTA. Unless you establish that your impairment substantially limits one or more major life activities as compared to the average person, you will not be entitled to NTA on the bar examination. All requests for NTA are evaluated on a case-by-case basis.

The effects of corrective and mitigating measures – both positive and negative – will be considered when determining whether a bar applicant is "substantially limited" in a major life activity and, therefore disabled. Corrective and mitigating measures may be measures undertaken with artificial aids, like medications and devices, and measures undertaken, whether consciously or not, with the body's own systems.

In compliance with the ADA, the Board is authorized to require specific documentation, and to establish procedures to evaluate that documentation in order to ensure that the applicant is an individual for whom accommodations are required. In accordance with that authority, the Board has developed a Nonstandard Testing Accommodations Application packet.

Nonstandard Testing Accommodations:

NTA means an adjustment or modification of the standard testing conditions that ameliorate the impact of the applicant's disability on the examination process without fundamentally altering the nature of the examination, which would not impose an undue administrative or financial burden on the Board, compromise the security, validity or reliability of the examination, or provide an unfair advantage to the applicant with the disability.

NTA Application Instructions:

1. Please read the following instructions carefully. They outline and provide details about the steps that must be followed in order for your request for NTA to be evaluated.
2. Provide a copy of these instructions to your medical/professional authorities.
3. This NTA application refers to the current bar examination only, and may not be used for another bar examination. If you require special assistance, or if you have specific circumstances requiring a deviation from the standard testing procedures, the NTA application must be completed and submitted. The Certification Statement (page no. 6) must be signed and dated, and the Authorization and Release (page no. 7) must be completed, signed, dated, notarized and submitted. Additionally, you must type your name and social security number on the Certificate of Law School Official, and submit it to your law school for completion (fax copies from your Law School are not acceptable.) This Certificate must be submitted to the Board office simultaneously with your NTA application and documentation.
4. Attach any documentation of your disability and your need for accommodation. If you do not provide any medical documentation with your initial NTA application, it may be immediately denied because you failed to meet your burden of proof and have not provided sufficient medical information required for a board consultant to make a recommendation. Compare your documentation with the information listed in these guidelines to ensure a complete submission.
5. Make copies of all documentation that you submit to the Board office. Please note that you may not be able to obtain copies of your NTA application at a later date.
6. Return your NTA application simultaneously with the required documentation, and your Application For Admission to the Wyoming State Bar and Request for Preparation of a Character Report under Wyoming Court Rules for Admission to Practice Law 201.

The NTA application must be an original (copies will not be accepted). Applicants must complete each section of the NTA application; otherwise, your application will be deemed incomplete and will be returned. Please be sure to list exactly what accommodations you are requesting (be very specific.) The only accommodations that will be reviewed and approved are the ones that you indicated on Page 4 of the NTA application, under NONSTANDARD TESTING ACCOMMODATIONS REQUESTED sections 11 and 12, (i.e., various accommodations mentioned in your personal statement (page 5), recommended by your medical expert in their reports, received in past testing environments, etc. will not be considered unless you specifically request them on page 4.) We have no way of knowing what accommodations you need unless you request them.

If the required medical/professional documentation and evaluations are not dated within the past three years (5 years for permanent physical disabilities), you will need to submit current documentation. This can be provided in the form of an addendum to original evaluations that were previously performed. You should also submit ALL previous medical evaluations/documentation to confirm the history of your disability. The recent (three years) evaluations are used to evaluate your current level of disability. Otherwise, the Board consultant may not be able to appropriately evaluate your request for NTA under the ADA, and you may be denied NTA. Please refer to the Wyoming Court Rules for Admission to Practice Law for filing deadlines and fees.

You may be required to submit to diagnostic testing by an independent doctor or specialist chosen by the Board, and you will be notified if this is required. Accordingly, the Authorization and Release for applicants requesting NTA must be completed, signed, dated and notarized in order to verify information and to facilitate the review process. A Board consultant may review requests for NTA pertaining to learning disabilities and/or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD.) Additionally, depending on the disability and the documentation submitted, requests for NTA pertaining to physical impairments may also be reviewed by a Board consultant. Please be sure to provide all of the requested documentation regarding your disability. Otherwise, the consultant will not be able to examine the basis for your diagnosis or the rationale for your requests and your request for NTA may be denied for insufficient documentation.

REAPPLICANTS: If you have submitted an NTA application within the past three years, and were granted accommodations, you are not required to resubmit supporting documentation from prior examinations, providing that your NTA information, including your limitations, has not changed and that you are requesting the same accommodations that were granted in the past. You are only required to submit the NTA application, along with a statement stating that you are requesting the same accommodations that were granted in the past. However, if you are requesting additional accommodations, your NTA application will be reviewed in its entirety, and you must submit all documentation in support of that request.

NOTE: Supporting documentation does not have to be resubmitted if it is dated within the past three years (5 years for permanent disabilities.) However, if the supporting documentation previously submitted is more than four years old (6 years for permanent disabilities), you must submit current documentation. This can be provided in the form of an addendum to original evaluations that were previously submitted.

Correspondence:

Inquiries regarding your submitted application must be in writing. Please do not call the Board office for an update on the status of your pending NTA application. All decisions regarding NTA will be finalized approximately 40 days prior to the examination. It is recommended that you prepare for the examination as though the accommodations have not been granted, until and unless you are otherwise notified in writing by the Admissions Director. You will receive written notice via United States Postal Service (USPS) certified mail of the disposition of your application as soon as a decision is made. If you do not receive a letter from the Board office regarding any requested accommodations 40 days prior to the bar examination, you must contact the Board office immediately.

NTA Application Processing (Approved/Denied):

If the requested testing accommodations are approved, you will be notified by letter, no later than 40 days prior to the bar examination. The only accommodations that will be reviewed and approved are the ones that you indicated on Page 4 of the NTA application, under NONSTANDARD TESTING ACCOMMODATIONS REQUESTED sections 11 and 12, (i.e., various accommodations mentioned in your personal statement (page 5), recommended by your medical expert in their reports, received in past testing environments, etc. will not be considered unless you specifically request them on page 4).

If the requested testing accommodations are denied, you will be notified by letter, no later than 40 days prior to the bar examination. No additional documentation will be accepted after the final filing deadline for any reason, unless requested by the Board.

If your request for NTA is denied by the Board of Law Examiners, you may appeal the Board's decision to the Wyoming Supreme Court. The appeal shall be filed with the Clerk of the Supreme Court within 10 days of the mailing of the notice of denial. No new evidence may be submitted in your request for an appeal. Please be advised that there will be no exceptions made to this policy for any reason. Please refer to Wyoming Court Rules for Admission to Practice Law 210(d)(3) for additional appeal information.

Filing Deadlines and Instructions:

Applications for NTA must be filed with the Clerk of the Wyoming Supreme Court simultaneously with filing of the application to sit for the bar examination. This allows time for diagnostic testing and medical examinations to be performed to facilitate NTA requests prior to the review deadline. You are encouraged to file your completed application and required documentation as early as possible in order to facilitate expedient decisions regarding accommodations that may be granted. No exceptions will be granted to the filing deadlines and/or filing fees.

If you are requesting NTA, you must submit the NTA application and supporting documentation simultaneously with the filing of your application to sit for the bar examination. An NTA application that is incomplete or otherwise not filed in compliance with these instructions will be returned via USPS regular mail. An application will be deemed incomplete for the following reasons, which are not exhaustive: 1) if any portion of it is not properly executed; 2) if the application, Certification Statement, and/or the Authorization and Release is not completed, signed, dated and/or notarized; 3) if any portion of it is missing; 4) if any questions are unanswered, incompletely answered or missing any required details; and/or 5) if any other required documentation is not submitted simultaneously with the filing of your application to sit for the bar examination.

If your NTA application is returned to you for any reason, you must resubmit the application and supporting documentation in accordance with the current application filing deadline. Applications will not be accepted after the filing deadline and/or without the appropriate filing fees. There will be no exceptions made to the filing deadline and/or filing fees for any reason. Therefore, if your application is incomplete and returned to you for any reason, you are still required to meet the filing deadline; otherwise you will not be permitted to sit for the bar examination with NTA. These are the only instructions you will receive. It is your sole responsibility to complete and submit the required documentation according to these instructions.

Please be advised that the Board is not responsible for the delivery and/or receipt of your application and required documentation. It is recommended that you use a guaranteed overnight courier (e.g., FedEx, UPS, USPS, etc.) to track the delivery of your application to the Supreme Court Clerk's Office. Due to the volume of documentation received, receipt of your application documentation will not be verified over the telephone.

Instructions to Medical Professionals and Applicants

Note to Medical Professionals:

In addition to the following instructions, if additional time to complete the examination is recommended, you must: 1) explain the rationale for the request; 2) specify the number of additional minutes per session (MBE A.M. and P.M., and Essay A.M.) that you are recommending (see Information and Passing Standards); 3) specify if the additional time is for testing or breaks; and 4) submit supporting documentation that the request for additional time ameliorates the impact of the applicant's disability on the examination process without fundamentally altering the nature of the examination. Note: The standard Wyoming bar examination is a one and one-half day timed test. The first day (Multistate Bar Examination) consists of 100 multiple choice questions for each of the three-hour A.M. and P.M. sessions. The second day consists of ten essay questions in one four-hour A.M. session. All applicants may take breaks and use the restroom at their convenience both days. All applicants receive an hour for lunch on the first day.

General Guidelines for all Disabilities:

The following guidelines are provided to assist the applicant in documenting a need for accommodation based on an impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities. The NTA application and documentation submitted in support of a request may be referred to a Board consultant who practices in the appropriate area of disability for a fair and impartial professional review.

1. You must complete and submit the original NTA application and Certificate of Law School Official. (Reapplicants are not required to submit a Certificate of Law School Official if previously submitted.)
2. You must also submit a comprehensive report describing your disability and its severity, which justifies the need for the requested accommodation:

State a specific diagnosis of the disability. A professionally recognized diagnosis for the particular category of disability is expected (e.g., the DSM-IV diagnostic categories for learning disabilities.)

Be current. Because the provision of reasonable accommodations is based on assessment of the current impact of the applicant's disability on the testing activity, it is in the individual's best interest to provide recent documentation. As the manifestations of a disability may vary over time and in different settings, in most cases an evaluation should have been conducted within the past three years (e.g., low vision or neuromuscular conditions are often subject to change and should be updated for current functioning.) Since applicants must establish "current impairment" in order to be eligible for accommodations, diagnostic evaluations that are more than three years old may be denied for that reason alone.

Describe the specific diagnostic criteria and name the diagnostic tests and other measures used, including the date(s) of evaluation, specific test results and a detailed interpretation of the test results. This description should include the results of diagnostic procedures and tests utilized and should include relevant educational, developmental, and medical history. Specific test results should be reported to support the diagnosis (e.g., documentation for an applicant with multiple sclerosis should include specific findings on the neurological examination, including functional limitations and MRI or other studies, if relevant.) Diagnostic methods used should be appropriate to the disability and should be consistent with current established professional practices within the field.

Describe in detail the individual's limitations due to the diagnosed disability (i.e., a demonstrated impact on functioning related to taking the bar examination) and explain the relationship of the test/evaluation results to the identified limitations resulting from the disability. The current functional impact on physical, perceptual and cognitive abilities should be fully described (e.g., an applicant with macular degeneration has reduced central vision which limits the ability to read.)

Recommend specific accommodations and/or assistive devices. Include a detailed explanation of why these accommodations or devices are needed and how they will reduce the impact of the identified functional limitations.

Establish the professional credentials of the evaluator that qualify them to make the particular diagnosis, including license or certification information and specialization in the area of the diagnosis. The evaluator should present evidence of comprehensive training and direct experience in the diagnosis and treatment of adults in the specific area of disability.

3. Additionally, if prior accommodations were not requested, required, or provided, the qualified medical/professional authorities must include a detailed explanation as to why accommodations were not sought or required in the past and why accommodations are now necessary.

Learning Disabilities:

Documentation for applicants submitting a request for an accommodation based on a learning disability or other cognitive impairment should contain all of the items listed in the General Guidelines for all Disabilities (General Guidelines) section. The following information explains the additional issues and documentation that must be addressed relative to learning disabilities.

Because learning disabilities are commonly manifested during childhood (although not always diagnosed), historical information regarding the individual's academic history and learning problems in elementary, secondary and post secondary education should be documented and provided. Establishing an early onset of symptoms and impairment during childhood can be accomplished by providing copies of historical documents such as report cards from kindergarten, elementary school, middle school, and high school, prior psychoeducational testing reports, copies of Individualized Educational Plans or 504 Plans, achievement test scores, teacher comments and the like. Self-report alone, without any accompanying historical documents that validate developmentally deviant learning problems, are generally not sufficient to establish a learning disability.

Documentation must be comprehensive. Objective evidence of a substantial limitation in learning must be provided. At a minimum, the current comprehensive evaluation should include the following:

1. A qualified professional must conduct the evaluation. The diagnostician must have comprehensive training in the field of learning disabilities and direct experience in working with an adult population.
2. Testing/assessment must be current. The determination of whether an individual is significantly limited in functioning according to ADA criteria is based on assessment of the current impact of the impairment (see General Guidelines.) A developmental disorder such as learning disability originates in childhood; therefore, information demonstrating a history of impaired functioning beginning in childhood, should also be provided.

3. A diagnostic interview and history taking. The assessment report should include a summary of a comprehensive diagnostic interview that includes relevant background information to support the diagnosis. In addition to the applicant's self-report, the report of assessment should include:
- A description of the presenting problem(s);
 - A developmental history that establishes a childhood onset of impairment;
 - Relevant academic history including results of prior standardized testing, grades, any suspensions or disciplinary actions, teacher comments describing classroom performance and behavior, study habits and notable trends in academic performance;
 - Family history, including primary language of the home and current fluency in English;
 - Relevant psychosocial history;
 - Relevant medical history including ruling out a medical basis for the present symptoms;
 - Relevant employment history including a description of how their learning problems impacted them on past or current jobs;
 - A discussion of dual diagnosis, alternative or co-existing mood, behavioral, neurological and/or personality disorders along with any history of relevant medication and current use that may impact the individual's learning; and,
 - Exploration and ruling out of possible alternative explanations that may better explain their learning/testing difficulties (such as situational stressors, anxiety, depression, divorce, substance abuse, etc.)

A formal psychoeducational or neuropsychological report must be provided. The psychoeducational or neuropsychological report must be submitted on the letterhead of a qualified medical/professional authority and it must provide clear and specific evidence that a learning or cognitive disability does or does not exist. Diagnosticians need to build a solid case for their diagnostic conclusions incorporating not only testing scores and self-reported history, but including evidence of real world functional impairment relating to the learning problems. For example, in the case of a reading disability, diagnosticians should provide evidence of persistent reading deficiencies in the classroom (low reading groups, history of tutoring/extra help, teacher observations of deficient oral reading or comprehension, resource room assistance, etc.) rather than a single test score on a standardized test such as the Nelson Denny Reading Test. The diagnosis must be based on the aggregate of test results, history and level of current functioning. It is not appropriate or acceptable to base any learning disability diagnosis on only one or two subtests. You must also present objective evidence of a substantial limitation to learning that goes beyond mere test scores. Any tests used must be appropriately normed for the age of the patient and must be administered in the designated standardized manner. Minimally, the domains to be addressed should include the following:

Cognitive functioning. A complete cognitive assessment is essential with all subtests and standard scores reported. This is necessary to rule out intellectual limitation as an alternative explanation for academic difficulty and to identify cognitive strengths and weaknesses. Acceptable measures include but are not limited to: Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale-III (WAIS-III); Woodcock Johnson Psychoeducational Battery-III; Tests of Cognitive Ability; and Kaufman Adolescent and Adult Intelligence Test.

Achievement. A comprehensive achievement battery with all subtests and standard scores is essential. The battery must include current levels of academic functioning in relevant areas such as reading (decoding and comprehension), spelling and written expression. Acceptable instruments include, but are not limited to the Woodcock Johnson Psychoeducational Battery-III; Tests of Achievement; and The Scholastic Abilities for Adults (SATA.) Other specific achievement tests may be a useful supplement to the achievement battery when interpreted within the context of other diagnostic information. However, please be advised that The Wide Range Achievement Test-3 (WRAT-3) and the Nelson Denny Reading Test are only screening tests and are not comprehensive diagnostic measures of achievement. Therefore, neither is acceptable if used as the sole measure of achievement and neither is sufficient to establish a learning disability.

Information Processing. Evidence of processing deficiencies might involve short and long term memory, sequential memory, auditory and visual perception/processing, auditory and phonological awareness, processing speed, executive functioning, and/or motor ability. It is recommended that these functions be assessed to delineate the learning disability. Acceptable measures include but are not limited to the Detroit Tests of Learning Aptitude-Adult (DTLA-A), Wechsler Memory Scale-III (WMS-III), and the Woodcock Johnson Psychoeducational Battery-III; Tests of Cognitive Ability.

Note: It is helpful to show how any testing weaknesses in these areas impact the person's learning and real world functioning in other major life activities.

Other Assessment Procedures (such as inspection of historical medical, psychiatric, academic, or vocational records, use of Rating Scales, input from collateral informants who know the person well such as parents, teachers, tutors, coaches) or clinical observations of behavior and mental status may be integrated with the above instruments to help support a differential diagnosis or to disentangle the learning disability from co-existing neurological and/or psychiatric issues. In addition to standardized test batteries, nonstandardized measures and informal assessment procedures may be helpful, especially if they serve to illuminate legitimate real world functional impairment in one or more life domains.

Actual test scores must be provided (standardized scores where available.) Evaluators should use the most recent form of tests and should identify the specific test form as well as the norms used to compute the scores. It is helpful to list all test data in a score summary sheet appended to the evaluation.

Records of academic history must be provided. Because learning disabilities most commonly have an onset during childhood, early school records, report cards, or other evidence of developmentally deviant learning problems should be provided whenever possible. Examples include kindergarten records, elementary, middle school, junior high, and high school report cards, written teacher comments, documentation from past tutors or learning specialists, past psychoeducational transcripts, 504 Plans, Individualized Education Plans (IEPs), college and law school transcripts, and the like. These sorts of records are essential to help validate self-reported impairment and to help determine if the history of functional impairment is of sufficient magnitude to rise to the level of clinical diagnosis and a disability. It is important to demonstrate the history of functional impairment via objective historical records; not just tell us about it. (Reapplicants are not required to resubmit undergraduate and law school transcripts.)

Clinicians must build a sufficient case for their diagnostic conclusions and document an attempt to rule out other possible causes for the learning problems.

The evaluation should provide a sound rationale to support the learning disability diagnosis, show how the deficits currently impair the individual's ability to learn, and show how they impair the person in standardized testing situations. Again, no single test or subtest is a sufficient basis for a learning disability diagnosis. The differential diagnosis must demonstrate that:

- Significant difficulties started early and have persisted in the acquisition and use of listening, speaking, reading, writing or reasoning skills.
- The problems being experienced are not primarily due to lack of other factors such as insufficient cognitive ability, lack of exposure to the behaviors/skills needed for academic learning or success in law school, or to an inappropriate match between the individual's ability and the instructional demands of the law school environment or the bar exam.

A clinical summary must be provided. A well-written diagnostic summary based on a comprehensive evaluative process is a necessary component of the clinician's report. Assessment instruments and the data they provide do not diagnose; rather, they provide important data that must be integrated with background information, historical information and current functioning. It is essential then that the evaluator builds a case for the diagnosis by integrating all of the assessment information gathered in a well-developed clinical summary. The following elements should be included in the clinical summary:

- Demonstration of the evaluator having ruled out alternative explanations for the identified academic problems as a result of poor education, poor motivation and/or study skills, emotional problems, attentional problems, substance abuse, or cultural or language differences;
- Indication of how patterns in cognitive ability, achievement and information processing (both in test scores and in real world functioning) are used to determine the presence of a learning disability;
- A description of what historical records were inspected and how they demonstrate a history of impairment that would support a learning disability diagnosis;
- A specific description of the substantial limitation to learning presented by the learning disability and the degree to which it impacts the individual in the context of taking the Wyoming bar examination; and
- Indication as to why specific accommodations are needed and how the accommodations will ease the impact of the disability in the testing (bar exam) situation.

Each accommodation recommended by the evaluator must include a rationale.

The evaluator must describe the impact the diagnosed learning disability has on a specific major life activity as well as the degree of significance of this impact on the individual. The diagnostic report must include specific recommendations for accommodations and a detailed explanation as to why each accommodation is recommended. Accommodation requests are not granted on the basis of a diagnostic label; they should be tied to the history of functional impairment. The documentation should include any record of prior accommodations or auxiliary aids, including any information about specific conditions under which the accommodations were used and whether or not they were effective. However, a prior history of receiving accommodations in other academic/testing environments is not a guarantee one will receive accommodations on the Wyoming bar exam. Applicants must provide sufficient documentation to substantiate they have a current need for accommodations and that they meet the ADA's definition of "disabled." If no prior accommodations have been provided, the qualified medical/professional authority must include a detailed explanation as to why no accommodations were used or necessary in the past and why accommodations are needed at this time.

NOTE:

1. Please be advised that the Wyoming bar examination does not test Math skills, and factors such as grammar, penmanship, and spelling are not considered in the grading of the essay answers. Additionally, problems such as test anxiety, English as a second language (in and of itself), slow reading without an identified underlying cognitive deficit, or failure to achieve a desired academic outcome are not learning disabilities, and therefore, not covered under the ADA.
2. If your request for NTA is approved, you will be tested in an area with other applicants receiving similar accommodations.

Guidelines for ADHD/ADD:

The diagnostic criteria as specified in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, Fourth Edition (DSM-IV) are used as the basic guidelines for determination of an Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder diagnosis. An applicant warranting an ADHD diagnosis must meet basic DSM-IV criteria including the following:

- A. Demonstrating that they exhibit a sufficient number of symptoms (listed in the DSM-IV) of Inattention and/or Hyperactivity/Impulsivity that have been persistent and maladaptive. The exact symptoms should be specified and described in detail and it should be shown how the patient meets criteria for long-standing history, impairment, and pervasiveness.
- B. Since ADHD is by definition a childhood onset disorder, the documentation must also provide evidence to support a childhood onset of symptoms and associated impairment. Self-report is generally insufficient to substantiate a childhood onset of symptoms/impairment. It is always helpful to provide historical records that validate self-reported impairment such as kindergarten records, elementary, middle school, junior high, and high school report cards, Individualized Education Plans (IEPs), 504 Plans, early psychoeducational testing reports, teacher comments, documentation from tutors or learning specialists, disciplinary records, and the like.
- C. Providing objective evidence demonstrating that current impairment from the symptoms is present in two or more settings. Since ADHD tends to affect people over time and across situations in multiple life domains, it is necessary to show that the impairment is not confined to only the academic setting or to only one circumscribed area of functioning.

- D. A determination that the symptoms of ADHD are not a function of some other mental disorder (such as mood, anxiety, or personality disorders, substance abuse, low cognitive ability, etc.) or situational stressor (such as divorce, grief reaction, family or financial crisis, etc.)
- E. Indicating the specific ADHD diagnostic subtype; Predominately Inattentive Type, Hyperactive Impulsive Type, Combined Type, or Not Otherwise Specified.

In addition, the following information explains some other important considerations regarding ADHD documentation:

Records of academic history must be provided. Because developmental disabilities such as ADHD are usually evident (though not always diagnosed), historical information regarding the individual's academic and behavioral functioning in elementary and secondary education should be provided (see B above.) In addition, you must provide transcripts from both undergraduate and law school. (Reapplicants are not required to resubmit undergraduate and law school transcripts.) Self-report alone, without any accompanying historical documents that validate developmentally deviant ADHD symptoms and impairment, are not sufficient to substantiate an ADHD diagnosis.

A qualified diagnostician must conduct the evaluation. Professionals conducting assessments and rendering diagnoses of ADHD must be qualified to do so. Comprehensive doctoral level training in the differential diagnosis of ADHD and other psychiatric disorders and direct experience in diagnosis and treatment of adults with ADHD is necessary. Diagnosticians should include a brief biographical sketch explaining that they possess the necessary training, experience, and credentials for diagnosing ADHD in adults. The evaluator's name, title and professional credentials should be clearly stated in the documentation.

Testing/assessment must be current. The determination of whether an individual is "significantly limited" in functioning is based on assessment of the current impact of the impairment on the Wyoming bar examination (see General Guidelines.) Because the provision of reasonable accommodations is based on assessment of the current impact of the examinee's disability on the testing activity, it is necessary to provide "recent" documentation. Since applicants must establish "current impairment" in order to be eligible for accommodations, diagnostic evaluations that are more than three years old may be denied for that reason alone. Therefore, professional declarations should be based on evaluations that are no more than three years old.

The documentation should build a case for and provide sufficient evidence for the ADHD diagnosis. An ADHD evaluation is primarily based on an in-depth history reflecting a chronic and pervasive history of ADHD symptoms and associated impairment beginning during childhood and persisting to the present day. The evaluation should provide a broad, comprehensive understanding of the applicant's relevant background including family, academic, behavioral, social, vocational, medical, developmental, and psychiatric history. There should be an emphasis on how the ADHD symptoms have manifested across various settings over time, how the applicant has coped with the problems, and what success the applicant has had in their coping efforts. Any past or current treatments for ADHD and the impact of those treatments should be discussed (including medications, accommodations, tutoring, classroom modifications, counseling, etc. Providing narrative documentation from collateral informants who know the applicant well (such as parents, spouses, siblings, teachers, professors, supervisors, tutors, coaches, etc.) can also help to illuminate and establish a credible history of significant functional impairment relating to ADHD.

Test scores alone are not sufficient to establish an ADHD diagnosis. Test scores or subtest scores alone should not be used as the sole basis for the diagnostic decision. Scores from subtests on the Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale-III (WAIS-III), memory function tests, attention or mental tracking tests or continuous performance tests do not in and of themselves establish the presence or absence of ADHD. They may, however, be useful as additional evidence of attentional problems that support the history of the applicant's functional impairment. A neuropsychological or psychoeducational assessment can be helpful in identifying the individual's pattern of strengths and weaknesses and whether there are patterns supportive of attention problems. However, a comprehensive testing battery alone, without illuminating a pattern of real world functional impairment, will not be sufficient to establish an ADHD diagnosis or a disability. Checklists and/or ADHD symptom rating scales can be a helpful supplement in the diagnostic process, but by themselves are not adequate to establish a diagnosis of ADHD. When testing is used, standard scores must be provided for all normed measures.

Each accommodation recommended by the evaluator must include a rationale. Thus, in addition to a comprehensive diagnostic evaluation, the report should also address the history of prior accommodations the person has received and the objective of those accommodations. Accommodations are not granted on the basis of a diagnostic label. Instead, accommodation requests need to be tied to a history of functional impairment that supports their use. The evaluator must describe the type and degree of impact the ADHD has on a specific major life activity and on the individual. The diagnostic report must include specific recommendations for accommodations that flow logically from the history of functional impairment. A detailed explanation must be provided as to why each accommodation is recommended and should be correlated to specific identified functional limitations.

It is important to note that a prior history of receiving accommodations in previous academic/testing environments is not a guarantee one will be granted accommodations on the Wyoming bar exam. Prior documentation may have been adequate in determining appropriate services or accommodations in the past. However, documentation should validate the need for accommodation based on the individual's current level of functioning and needs to show that the person currently meets the ADA's definition of "disabled." The documentation should include any record of prior accommodation or auxiliary aid, including information about specific conditions under which the accommodation was used (e.g., standardized testing, final exams, etc.) However, a prior history of accommodation without demonstration of a current need does not in itself warrant the provision of a similar accommodation. If no prior accommodation has been provided, the qualified medical/professional authority and/or individual being evaluated should include a detailed explanation as to why no accommodation was used in the past and why accommodation is necessary at this time.

Documentation must include a specific diagnosis. The report must include a specific subtype diagnosis of ADHD based on the DSM-IV diagnostic criteria. Evaluators should be particularly careful regarding individuals diagnosed with ADHD, predominately inattentive type, since this is often confused with symptoms of poor organization, test anxiety, or memory/concentration difficulties that are evident only on a situational basis. Given that many individuals benefit from prescribed medications and therapies, a positive response to medication in and of itself neither supports nor negates the ADHD diagnosis or the need for accommodation.

IMPORTANT NOTE: In the case of ADHD, you must submit:

1. documentation/records from childhood to help establish a childhood onset of symptoms (report cards, IEPs, teacher comments, etc.)
2. documentation of your functional impairment in activities beyond academics and test taking.
3. documentation of your current and past functional impairment beyond self-report.

Visual Disabilities:

A qualified evaluator who is familiar with the disability of the individual must submit a vision evaluation report that includes the following information:

- Detailed Visual and Medical History
- Current Diagnosis
- Best Corrected Visual Acuities for Distance and Near Vision
- Diagnosis-specific Findings (address all relevant areas).
 - Visual Field: threshold field, not confrontation (provide measurements and copies of reports).
 - Binocular Evaluation: eye deviation (provided measurements), diplopia, suppression, depth, etc. Specify the distance or near point.
 - Accommodative Skills: at the near point, with and without lenses (provide measurements).
 - Oculomotor Skills: saccades, pursuits, tracking.
- Describe how the individual's diagnosis and symptomology relate to his/her reading ability and why each recommended accommodation is needed. Your recommendation cannot be supported solely by a history or prior accommodation.

NOTE TO ALL EVALUATORS: You must address all sections in the evaluation report that pertain to the impairment of the individual. Please reference specific tests, clinical observations, or other objective data and provide documentation of tests, if relevant. To avoid delays in the processing of accommodation requests, it is very important that all information provided is comprehensive and legible.

NOTE TO APPLICANTS: *The information and documentation provided by you are subject to the same obligation of candor as all other information provided in your application. Providing false documentation or information may result in the denial of your application to sit for the bar examination. All information provided is subject to the confidentiality provisions of Wyoming Court Rules and Procedures Governing Admission to the Practice of Law Rule 104. Nonstandard Testing Accommodations
Certification Statement

I am aware that it is my responsibility to file a complete nonstandard testing accommodations (NTA) application, and I understand that it will be returned to me if found to be incomplete, untimely, or otherwise not filed in compliance with the instructions. I have attached all original supporting documentation to this application.

I certify that the information contained herein is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I understand that false statements made herein are subject to the penalties of Wyoming Court Rules and Procedures Governing Admission to the Practice of Law 401(b)(3), relating to false or misleading statements made in application for admission to the Bar, and Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 6-5-303, relating to false swearing in nonjudicial or nonadministrative proceeding.

I understand that the full and correct completion of this NTA application is a pre-requisite for the Board of Law Examiners' consideration of my NTA application. I hereby certify that all of my answers are true and complete. I am aware that if any answers are willfully omitted or false, I may prejudice my examination results, admission to the Wyoming State Bar, my subsequent good standing as a member of the bar, and that I may be subjected to such penalties as provided by law. I further certify that I have read the foregoing NTA application and the facts stated therein are true and complete to the best of my knowledge and belief.
